AM MAGAZINE

Wayne Jones, Managing Director of Jones architecture + design briefly explains three significant changes on the way which will have a dramatic implications on your Dealership property development.

"Next year will see Building Regulations change. From April 2014, carbon emissions for Car Dealerships will have to be 9% more energy efficient than the 2010 building regulations. From 2019, new commercial buildings will need to be zero carbon. Furthermore, from April 2018, it will be unlawful to rent out a commercial building that does not reach a minimum energy efficiency standard or EPC Rating of E. This will affect hundreds of older dealerships which are leased and may have the lowest energy rating of F or G. Refurbishment of fabric and services at very least will be required to meet this legislation change".

"As an Architectural practice, we are constantly having to find new ways to deliver compliant designs whilst keeping building costs to a minimum. To help our clients, we have invested heavily in new Building Information Modeling (BIM) and energy evaluation software which means we can advise you on reducing CO2 emissions from early design stage".

BIM - Building Information Modeling

By adopting AEC (UK) BIM standards and through established BIM systems and protocols, Jones architecture + design offers Building Information Modeling and Management Consultancy services. The BIM process allows us to create buildings in a virtual 3D environment allowing Clients to experience a digital prototype of their building in advance of its physical construction.

BUSINESS TIMES

A Northamptonshire architecture and design firm has been sharing its optimism on the year ahead for the automotive industry in the country and across the UK. Jones architecture + design, based in East Haddon, has worked in partnership with the automotive industry for many years for brands such as BMW, MINI, Volvo, Vauxhall, Fiat and, most recently, Jaguar, Mercedes and Lamborghini.

"We work very closely with leading dealer groups and brands within the automotive industry and as we move into the spring of 2014 the economic future of that industry is a real positive one." said Wayne Jones at architecture + design.

"UK car sales are at their highest for seven years with 10.8 per cent rise since 2012. When people have the confidence to buy a new car, it means their confidence in other goods and the wider economic position is strong."

"The experience that Jones architecture + design brought to this dealership project was fundamental to its success and the collaborative approach that they took with the Manufacturers, planners and T H White was commendable".

Alex Scott, Director, T H White Group

"Jones architecture + design is always available to chat through ideas and give an unbiased opinion which is so important when dealing with third parties such as car manufacturers and local councils.

We have built a strong relationship and the wide variation of knowledge across a number of sectors has been invaluable in maximising our investment and budget opportunities over the years.
